

The pair were selected from the 18 Alameda County district winners, after submitting an extensive application for panel review.

“Each year, we are honored to host this event in celebration of the district winning teachers,” said L. Karen Monroe, Alameda County Superintendent of Schools. She continues, “It is not only a time to acknowledge the work of these amazing individuals, but to also shine a well-deserved spotlight on our county’s education community. These winning teachers are representatives of all the extraordinary educators serving and supporting Alameda County youth.”

The celebratory event, hosted at the Castro Valley Center for the Arts was attended by close to 300 people including the winners’ families, school and district leaders, elected officials, and community members. All 18 district winners were recognized for their dedication and commitment to the impactful work they do with students.
